Reflection Divine Mercy Sunday

It seems that after Good Friday Thomas had cut himself off from the other apostles and walked alone. This was a big mistake. But we must remember that he was in deep grief. People who are grieving have tendency to isolate themselves. While it is understandable it is not helpful. In cutting himself off from the other apostles, Thomas made things more difficult for himself. However, it seems that he hadn't cut himself off completely. Whenever he met them, he would have noticed a difference in them. Their fear was largely gone and had been replaced by joy and peace. It was clear that someone had breathed new life into them. They claimed that they had seen Jesus. It was only when he joined the community that Thomas encountered the risen Jesus, and so found the faith again. To be a believer, or just a spiritual person, in today's world can be a lonely business. We need support. Here is where the community comes in. It is only with the help of the community that we can resolve our doubts and sustain our faith. We live as members of a community of believers whose common faith strengthens the faith of each individual. The first Christians supported one another by praying and worshipping together, and by a loving service of one another.

The sacred and precious wounds of Jesus are a source of consolation, courage, and hope to us. They help us to come to terms with our own wounds. By his wounds we are healed of self-pity and the sense of victimhood. Jesus invites us to draw close to him in faith and to look at his wounds. Our task is to make Christ visible in the world. That is the way it was with the first disciples. Once they had seen Christ, they felt compelled to make him known to others. The world today is full of doubters and unbelievers. The only way they will be converted to belief is if they can “see” Jesus and touch him in his followers. But if we, his followers, have no wounds of love to show them, the unbelievers are not likely to be convinced.
