Called to be ambassadors of peace

Peace implies openness, friendship, tolerance, goodwill, hospitality, reconciliation. It disposes us to reach out to others. It helps us to break down the barriers of suspicions, fear, prejudice, bigotry. Working for peace means welcoming people close to us, those who annoy us or disagree with us, those who provoke anguish within us. To take the path of peace is to accept people as they are, with all their limitations and weaknesses. The people we need to make peace with are not our friends but our enemies.

If we wish to be effective messengers of peace three things are necessary. Firstly, we have to have peace ourselves. Secondly, we have to be willing to share that peace with others. Thirdly, the other person has to be willing to receive it from us. The opportunities for sharing peace, for making peace, are many. We may not always succeed, because it takes at least two to make peace. The great danger is that we will allow people to take our peace away. This happens whenever we become angry, hostile, bitter, and vengeful when others do not respond favourably to us. We have to accept that our peace will not always be accepted. It may come back to us like the echo of our own voice. But at least we ought to try. In a world torn apart by rivalry, anger and hatred, we have the challenging vocation to be living signs of love that can bridge divisions and heal wounds.
